Social work and social care are engaged in an exciting period of national development, but in uncertain times politically and financially. More than ever, we need to ensure that our experienced practitioners, managers and educators have the confidence, skill and resilience to promote excellence.

This one day conference will focus on the creative potential of high quality qualifying and post-qualifying programmes to develop the potential of front line staff and managers, as well as educators and trainers. The Tavistock and Portman NHS Foundation Trust and the University of East London provide a wide range of fully accredited programmes for social workers, that promote professional confidence, build resilience, deepen and extend knowledge.

At this conference you will hear about the practice related learning and achievements of students, and learn about some of their creative research. Employers will provide their own perspective on the organisational value of PQ programmes. A keynote address in the afternoon from a colleague close to the work of the Social Work Task Force and Reform Board will offer a perspective on current national developments in social work.

Are you thinking about applying for PQ training, or a doctoral programme in social work? Are you wondering whether the organisational investment will be worth it? Come and join in this conference, hear some inspiring presentations, and have your say...
